

SEWING CLASSES STARTED AT Y. W.

Hold Morning and Afternoon Classes Every Day of the Week.

Though the organdie frocks of summer are still the mode of Tulsa's feminine folks, wise members of the sex are already taking thought for their fall wardrobes and such will welcome the announcement that classes in sewing will open shortly at the Y. W. C. A.

Instruction will be in both beginning and advanced sewing. Each course will consist of 12 lessons, given twice a week with two hours to a lesson. There will be morning and afternoon classes for housewives and mothers and evening classes for business women. The instructor will be Mrs. Lena M. Mattox, who successfully conducted

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," Offers Sheer Nonsense, Sheer Joy and Sheer Pajamas

A hurricane of laughter is the natural Result of a performance of this original and unique comedy. Begins an engagement at the Palace Theater Sunday.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a hilarious comedy, is announced for presentation at the Palace theater beginning Sunday. This is the same comedy that created such furore during its stage run in New York city. As a stage offering it had all America on the excited list, and its run in all the eastern and western cities were of the long variety.

Allan Dale, one of America's foremost critics, declared "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" to be one of the really funny farces ever produced. In part he said: "I should set it down as 'frisky,' and let it go at that. The avowed object of the piece is laughter, and that the object is attained nobody will deny. The second act is chaotically hilarious. You could scarcely avoid laughter if you tried to. Anyway, why try? I am quite willing to confess that I laughed in a perfectly interior way, and asked no questions."

Eugene Pallette, the model husband of "Fair and Warner," starring May Allison, declares he has found more real spine ticklers in the present picture than in any previous film or stage production in which he has appeared. Having contracted incipient influenza through his numerous exposures to showers and an abnormal thirst through his close association with a gigantic, though empty, champagne bottle, the merry screen player is in a position to know. Much more time than had been expected was consumed in Metro's film version of the farce because of the care that has been taken in the planning of every detail of the dainty sets that serve as a background for the story. Director Edward Dillon, aided by a special staff of technical men and artists, worked out a decorative scheme for the three rooms denoted in the title of the picture that will bring joy to the hearts of all honeymooners.

Ruth Stonehouse is the adroit dealer in society scandal who entangles "Reggie," the model husband impersonated by Mr. Pallette, and leads his relatives and associates an exciting chase. Mr. Pallette's long experience in a wide variety of roles, from the most tragic to the broadest of farce, has been drawn upon for the comedy situations that have been crowded into the picture.

The opportunities for dainty costumes have not been overlooked by either Miss Stonehouse or any other feminine member of the all-star cast. As the scandal-sheet reporter who breaks into society she makes use of more than a dozen costumes ranging from the most colorful of sport suits to a pair of black net pajamas. The pajamas, by the way, were designed by Miss Stonehouse herself after a protracted conference with Director Dillon. "I want something sort of, well, you know—snappy is as near as I can come to describing the thing that will fit into the spirit of the story," said Mr. Dillon in conclusion. "And here you have them," said Miss Stonehouse, a few days later. It was the first time pajamas of net had been seen in the studio. It is sufficient to say that the director agreed that they were all he had ordered.

Kathleen Kirkham, who is the Angelica Irving of the picture, ran Miss Stonehouse a close second in the matter of costumes. All of her numerous gowns, negligees and coats incline to green, from the lightest tints to the most decided St. Patrick shade.

Even to the details of the decorations and arrangements of furnishings in the office of the fictitious society newspapers the feminine ideas have prevailed. They are emphasized to such an extent, in fact, that the average newspaper man may find fault with the new handling facilities of the office. However, the society reporter's idea of an office is more that of a boudoir than a collection of desks, chairs and business paraphernalia and this is the thought that was stressed in the arrangement of the scene.

"Treasure Island"—Majestic

A sumptuous production of Robert Louis Stevenson's celebrated story, "Treasure Island," comes to the Majestic for an engagement beginning Sunday. This elaborate tale has been made into a lavish and important presentation by Paramount Artcraft, for which a most notable cast has been secured.

Lon Chaney, Bull Montana, Chas. Ogle, Shirley Mason and other popular players are seen and the entire setting is said to be more than a production—it is a mammoth carnival of scenic splendor.

later of Black Dog; the fight over the sea chest and the capture of the chart showing the location of Captain Flint's treasure by Jim; the expedition to seek the buried gold; the mutiny, the battles with the pirates at the stockade and the final success—all the absorbing episodes that have made Stevenson's book a delight live vividly on the screen.

The famous producer has retained on the screen all the romance and villainy of the Spanish Main that Stevenson knew so well how to portray. In excellent realistic detail he has reproduced the old Benbow Tavern, where lived young Jim Hawkins and his mother. The coming of Bill Bones, the rascous sea captain, and
